

MICHELLE STEEL

Orange County Supervisor

As a public servant, I believe that principles are more important than politics, people more important than parties. That's why I've worked hard to apply my principles to real policies that impact real people.

As a principle, I believe that people live better when they keep more of their hard earned money. I don't think government spends money with as much care and diligence as the normal family. That's why I've opposed higher taxes time and again... because you know how to spend your own money better than I do.

As a principle, I believe that when you make government more transparent to the public, the government becomes more accountable and generally better run. That's why I helped make sure the public had easy access to what actions the county government was discussing... so the public can keep the politicians honest.

As a principle, I believe that fair and open competition provides the best services at the lower prices. That's why I worked to make sure we brought free market ride sharing to the airport... services that allow average people to pay a reasonable price for transportation.

Good principles, good policy, happy people. It's that simple.
